Editorial

Some men build their own memorials . . .

Such a man was Max Jasperson, local electrician who died in Salt Lake last month after a short illness.

Heber City's 18-block White Way is one of many memorials to Max and he was largely responsible for its completion. As a consultant to Heber Light and Power he helped get the project underway.

"Had it not been for him," Mayor Raymond Jiaocetti told the Wave this week, "we would still be struggling with it."

In addition, Max worked with power crews to make possible the new television installation on Wilson Hill north of Midway. The beacon light which burns there nightly is a testimony to his electrical genius.

At the time of his death at the age of 51 Max headed a new department for Heber Light and Power, formed to give customers better service on appliance repairs.

Not least among his contributions to Wasatch County were the many hours he spent wiring LDS chapels being constructed here. Generous with his time and labor, Max did most of such work without charging for it.

The Wasatch Wave salutes Max Jasperson . . . a man who built his own memorial.
